

IS MEANS INDUSTRIAL PEACE-HUGGINS

Just Talk Rotarians of the Workings of Kansas Labor Legislation.

Characterizing the present day struggle between capital and labor as most brutal and destructive, Judge Huggins in this respect than the war of arms not long concluded, is advocating legislation to correct the evils, Judge W. L. Huggins of Topeka, Kan., left an indelible impression on the minds of several hundred hearers at the Watch Tower last night. While the majority of the audience was made up of Rotarians, many women and non-Rotarians gathered to hear the famed jurist deliver his address on "Justice and Industrial Relations," for which he has gained a wide degree of national prominence. The occasion was the annual inter-city Rotary meeting.

Judge Huggins is the presiding judge of the court of industrial relations at Topeka. His duties bring him into close personal touch with both sides of the troubles that arise between capital and labor and have enabled him to give close study to remedial conditions. He advocates through the medium of legislation based on the common law; in other words, old principles to new applications.

Explains Kansas Law. His address was largely an explanation of the Kansas labor laws, given with a view to correcting untrue impressions of the law brought about through an improper understanding and acceptance of the practices of its opponents. Bringing his points out forcibly under his power of oratory, he held the Kansas labor legislation up as a model for other states to follow if true industrial peace is to come on the basis of justice to both sides in the great struggle.

Judge Huggins referred to the Kansas coal strike as merely having the adoption of the industrial law, rather than being directly responsible. He declared that the great legislators of his state had been discussing the need of such action long before the strike of the miners brought it to a head. He charged each one with being responsible for all the trouble attendant upon the strike of the miners.

No Blame to Strikers. "I do not blame the men for the strike," he declared. "I think they had a just grievance at the time. The coal operators sought to increase their prices on the product and at the same time they demanded an increase for their labor because of contracts which the men had signed to continue in force until the end of the war. The operators insisted that the war had not ended and refused to discuss with the men.

Can Quit in Body. "There is nothing on the statutes of Kansas which denies a man the right to quit his job. There is nothing which says a group of men organized for mutual protection and interests cannot meet and vote to quit their work in a body.

"But the law does say that these men who quit cannot stand outside the doors of the scene of their former employment and throw bricks and otherwise cause damage against the persons of those who come to take their places. The law will not countenance the destruction of property.

"The law seeks to give justice to both sides. If the labor union has a grievance, justice will be administered as the court decides. If capital has a grievance, just so will the court decide as the evidence warrants."

Denounces One-Man Control. Judge Huggins denounced the system of one-man control in capital and one-man control in labor. He charged that great corporations have been so manipulated as to bring the great force of their power under a single head. By this was labor taught the lesson of organization modeled after the system of capitalism, with the result that one man often assumes the position of a dictator. In the circumstances that follow, the lunatic public is made to pay. Judge Huggins declared against intimidation by any class or organization on contrary to the principles of democracy upon which this republican form of government is founded.

Gives Instances. An instance of intimidating methods he gave as the occasion when certain classes of labor demanded a certain law on a certain day of congress and threatened to call a strike of 3,000 men which would have brought sorrow and misery into many homes through a tie-up of interstate commerce unless this demand was adhered to. He said that if the leaders of this organized labor force had told congress that an appeal would be taken if the law was ignored, it would have been an instance of a free working of democracy.

The judge declared that if the government fails to handle cases of this kind as they should be handled, then democracy fails in its most important function. In beginning his address, the speaker reviewed the rise of the democratic form of government down through the centuries, declaring it to be the only form of government that gave an equal opportunity to every man. He cited the lives of Lincoln and Lloyd George as fitting examples of what the boy born in humble circumstances can accomplish.

Games Are Enjoyed. The Rotarians thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon program, consisting of an automobile tour of the quad-cities and Rock Island arsenal and athletic contests and other sports at Douglas park. From the hour of 3 o'clock until 6, Douglas park rang with the shouts of the dignified men, once more youngsters. Ball games were played with the large indoor ball. So great was the fun derived that scores were forgotten. Various races and other mirth provokers served to arouse appetites to a keen pitch, so that by the time Rotarian George Stephenson was ready with the chicken supper at the Watch Tower, everyone was prepared to do it full justice. Colonel Harry B. Jordan, president of the Rock Island Rotary club, acted as master of ceremonies following the dinner, which was served at tables on the gravel surface immediately in front of the inn. The program was added much to the enjoyment of hearing these called upon for short talks. A quartet from Peoria scored heavily with a song inviting district Rotarians to meet in Peoria next April. At the conclusion of the toast program, the entire assemblage adjourned to the open air pavilion where Judge Huggins delivered his masterful address.
